Kent County Council sponsors new

Green Hero Award

Are you a “green hero”? Have you helped to green up the area you live in, to bring nature back, and to make it more attractive? Share your success stories with us at Home@Garden magazine. We’re running a new Green Hero competition with the local council, so we’re looking for green heroes who can tell us about their local community projects and share their experiences. If you think you have the right profile to win the Green Hero Award, email your application to our reporter Robyn Wilson and join the competition.

- c Read the email. What does Robyn do and why is she writing to Alex and Sam?

To Alex Turner; Sam Chapel
Subject Green Hero Award

Dear Alex, Dear Sam,

Thank you for sending your applications for the Green Hero Award. I am delighted to confirm that we would like to interview you for our special Home@Garden article.

I've been writing articles for the magazine for six years, but this is the first time I'm reporting on “green” community projects. I've been doing some research on different green projects recently and I'm really looking forward to hearing about your community projects. Kent County Council and Home@Garden have been planning this award for over two years, and I hope we can inspire more people in Kent to set up their own green community projects.

During the interview I'd like to focus on these points:

What is your green community project?

How long have you been running the project for? Have you had any problems?

What are the benefits of your project for the area?

My apologies for the late reply. I've been trying to organise the interview since last week, but I've been waiting for the photographer to contact me. He's free on Friday, 17th August at 2 p.m. Is that possible for you? If necessary, he's available on the 20th as well. I'm looking forward to meeting you both.

Best regards,

Robyn Wilson

Kent County Council sponsors new Green Heroes

by Robyn Wilson

This month, we find out how the two finalists for the Green Hero Award brought more nature into their communities: Alex Turner, who runs a community allotment, and Sam Chapel, who started a petting zoo.

b Work in two groups. Group A reads about Alex and Group B reads about Sam. First underline the most important information for each question in the article. Then tell a person from the other group what you read about.

Alex Turner, Ashford

What is your green community project?

I run a community allotment on a piece of land next to an old factory. We've created a wonderful garden for local people to grow fruit and vegetables. It's a great idea because some people don't have a garden or don't know how to grow food. Anyone who is interested in growing fruit and vegetables can sign up, and because we share the work, we share the results. Our products are organic, so they're good for the environment too. We're thinking about starting a beekeeping project in the garden so that we can also make honey.

How long have you been running the project for? Have you had any problems?

I started the project about twelve years ago. In the beginning, it wasn't easy because of the work we had to do to prepare the allotment. We're a small team, so we had a lot of work, but we achieved a lot together and the results are definitely worth it!

What are the benefits of your project for the area?

Older people come to meet friends and to share their interest in healthy food. Two years ago, a mum suggested doing something for local children, so we started the Grow2School project. Schoolchildren have been learning about different types of fruit this year, and a few weeks ago, they sold their own jam at a farmers' market.

Sam Chapel, Yarling

What is your green community project?

I run a community petting zoo in the lovely Kent countryside. I moved here for the fresh air and beautiful sunrises and sunsets over the fields. I noticed that some children didn't spend any time outdoors, so I started the zoo to encourage the children to reconnect with nature. We have domestic animals like goats, sheep, chickens, a few cows and some horses. And there's Felix, my cat, who helps me to run the zoo.

How long have you been running the project for? Have you had any problems?

I've been running the zoo since 2013. We've been working closely with local schools for two years, and the kids have been taking care of the farm animals recently. Yes, we had a big problem in 2014 because of the terrible flood, but in the end it was all OK. We live in a wet climate, so we have a good plan for floods.

What are the benefits of your project for the area?

People are more interested in domestic and wild animals now. We've created some information packs so that people can help wild animals like squirrels and hedgehogs during this heatwave. And children spend a lot of their free time outdoors at the zoo. They've been writing info packs recently to teach visitors about the plants and birds in the area. Hiking here's great because of the inspiring landscape and the wildlife.

a Do you think recycling in other countries is different than in your own country? How?
What about in the USA? Discuss in small groups. PRE-READING

b Read Hannah Schmitt's column. Does she like Boulder's zero-waste strategy? READING

A WHOLE CITY GOES ZERO WASTE: BOULDER, COLORADO, USA

HANNAH'S GLOBAL CONNECTIONS

Have you heard about the newest green trend? It's called 'zero waste' and it encourages people to buy less, recycle everything and throw nothing away. Does this sound impossible? Well, many people thought the same thing. But now they can fit all of their waste for the year into a small jar! It has become very popular and even whole cities, like Boulder, Colorado, are signing up for zero-waste programmes.

I travelled there to see what a zero-waste city looks like and wasn't disappointed. Boulder is a university city in the heart of the Rocky Mountains. Because of this special location the locals have always felt very connected to the environment. So a few years ago they were shocked to find out that other cities, like San Francisco and Portland, put most of their rubbish into the organic or recycling bin, but in Boulder almost everything went straight into the waste bin.

As someone who grew up with recycling in Germany, I remember being shocked when I did a school exchange programme in the US years ago. My host mum didn't recycle anything, not even glass! So I was surprised and pleased to see three bins in shops, restaurants and on every street corner in Boulder. Things have definitely changed since my first visit!

The project doesn't just encourage people to sort their rubbish better, but also to reduce what they recycle. This means there isn't any plastic cutlery or crockery in fast food restaurants. Everything is made of plants and can go in the organic bin.

Boulder wants to be an environmental leader for the nation. By 2025 they want 85% of their total rubbish to be organic or recycled. They also hope to show how zero waste can become an easy part of our daily lives and how small changes can make a big difference. After my visit, I think they'll definitely achieve their goals.

b Reading comprehension: Read the five texts, Items 1–5. Then read the headlines a–j. Decide which headline a–j goes best with which text.

- a Are how-to videos more exciting than the classroom?
- b Getting their hands dirty for the community
- c Grandparents learn from children
- d Hands-on learning with the older generation
- e Learning a language? There's an app for that.
- f Schoolchildren work at the Leeds community allotment
- g Step by step: that's the road to success
- h Students offer their time to teach
- i The same job for 30 to 40 years
- j Want to change jobs? Read this first!

- 1 How do you learn new things? Do you like trying it yourself or reading the instructions first? Some schools think a good way to learn is with grandparents from the community who show the children a new skill. The children love trying something new and the grandparents enjoy teaching children things their own parents taught them.
- 2 Everyone has something they'd like to accomplish. But some people can't imagine having time to do it. Some say the best way to become successful is to take one small step every day. For example, if you're learning a foreign language, learning a few words every day is better than learning a long list once a month.
- 3 A community allotment in Leeds has been getting a lot of attention recently because the people who work there give all of their fruit and vegetables to local schools for the school dinners. Now all the children are enjoying healthy, locally grown food at school and some of them have visited the garden to see where it comes from.

- 4 It seems that the youngest generation is always online. So it's not surprising that they prefer using the Internet to learn a new skill. Because there are many websites and videos that explain things quickly and easily, teachers have to work hard to be as interesting.
- 5 Many people between the ages of 30 and 40 have been working for ten or more years in the same job and are becoming bored with it. Some people consider looking for a new job. But studies show that even small changes at work, like a new desk or a different team, make people more motivated.
